THE PLAYERS

LYDIA VANDERMERE – The Mother, Crusader

Beautiful, overworked, tired, this is a woman who would do anything for her child including leaving Eric six years ago for a life outside the agency. Except the agency couldn't quite leave her alone. Or the military and the tech giant VaxTek that used her vaccine to carry nanotech capable of horrible things in the wrong hands.

ERIC STRAITS – The Warrior, Chief

Galvanized and blue eyed. Eric never found out why Lydia left him because she disappeared without a trace. Even with his resources, he couldn't find her. Her leaving him pushed him to abandon the spec ops missions and stick around home with his team, protecting America and stopping terrorists before they could harm anyone.

MUSTAJAB ALI – The Tyrant, Terrorist

Charismatic and ripped. A Mujaheddin. He redefines toughness and drive as a full on sociopath and psychopath who keeps it under wraps. Mustajab uses other men's misery to articulate his plan to bring the same kind of suffering to the British and Americans. He has a larger agenda that will change the landscape of the United States forever.

SEBASTIAN FARMER – Evil Genius, Traitor

Ex-CIA, rugged, tan, an ivy-league bachelor who's never satisfied with the status-quo. He trained Lydia. There's something in his eyes, and he seems to know too much about everything.

MARKUS RAMON – The Traitor, Bastard

Professional ass kisser on his way up, whatever the cost. He does as he commanded to. A particular thorn in Eric's side for a long time.

HASHIM MOHAMMAD – Professor, Bastard

White Collar. Dignified. He loved America until his son was killed by American and British bombs. From the ashes of depression, he found a new purpose with Mustajab and his men. Blood for blood.

AAMILAH MOHAMMAD – The Silent Majority, Protector

Hashim's wife. Fiercely exquisite. Proud. Doesn't want her husband working with Mustajab or his men. Feels powerless. She's trying to break through his pain and anger over their son's death.

NADIA MOHAMMAD – The Good and Sad Child

Demure and sweet. Hashim's daughter bears the weight of her brother's death, and doesn't like who her father is becoming.

SYNOPSIS – Lydia thought she saved the world. She was wrong.

Mustajab and his men threaten Hashim to enter a computer code by sending his wife and daughter to the afterlife. Hashim enters the code. And there's no going back now.

Hours earlier, Lydia drops her unhappy six year old daughter off at her mother's house and drives to work through a dystopian landscape. She leads the virology team, that on this day is responsible for the super vaccine distributed worldwide, that ends a six year pandemic. But as the congratulations roll in, they receive reports that the vaccine is contaminated with nanotech. When Lydia steps out to get a sample of the alleged vaccine at the gate, her entire lab and team are blown up. Now she's on the run and her ex-boyfriend, Eric, who she left six years ago, a CIA/Homeland security agent, is hot on her trail.

Lydia evades Eric in the Washington D.C. Landscape, escapes through the subway and finds her CIA mentor, Sebastian, to help her figure out what's happening. They discover the nanotech in the vaccine was made by a Chinese manufacturer for the U.S. Military. Sebastian gives Lydia a secret file that may provide more answers. Lydia secretly meets Eric to tell him she's being framed while passing the file to him as proof of a conspiracy. Lydia returns to Sebastian and learns someone has attempted and failed at hacking a Russian satellite that will be crossing an American satellite capable of weaponizing the nanotech. Someone tips the agency that Eric and Lydia had a previous relationship and assign Markus and his team to apprehend her.

Lydia and Eric regain their mutual trust and team up while a terrorist group recruit a previous colleague of Lydia's, Hashim, who lost his son to American attacks in Afghanistan. Causing great conflict in his own family, Hashim helps the terrorists' cell by writing the command codes that will activate and control the nanotech allowing them to target people based on race, age, sex, and other genetic markers. After a satellite hacking test run on Google's network and evading tracking by Eric's team, the terrorists hack the Russian satellite successfully and use it to hack the "retired" U.S. Star Wars satellite capable of beaming down activation commands. The terrorists test their super weapon on Trafalgar Square in England, killing thousands of men, women, and children. In one hour the satellite will be over the United States.

Lydia and Eric's team work at finding the terrorists' location in Washington D.C. while the terrorists release a video revealing their plan to attack America. They will first target all the children of Washington D.C. so that America's leaders will know the pain and suffering they have endured. After that, the terrorists will create a Muslim state in America by wiping out all non-Middle Eastern people. Lydia, Eric and Markus' team finally track and attack the terrorists. It's an ultimate fighting brawl to the end, including stopping the real mastermind behind the conspiracy who appears and shoots Lydia. Lydia barely changes the nanotech codes in time and instead of an attack, something miraculous happens. Lydia reunites her daughter with her father, Eric.
